

The World Community for Christian Meditation

Published on The World Community for Christian Meditation (<http://www.wccm.org>)

Home > School of Meditation Weekly Teachings > Printer-friendly PDF

Weekly Teachings 22/7/2012

Doing and Being

The story of Martha and Mary in the Gospel of Luke (Luke 10:32-42) illustrates the importance of the integration of doing and being, of the relationship between action and contemplation. Martha represents the active, busy life we all lead every day with its demands of work, friendship and hospitality.

Who hasn't felt annoyed at others listening to a favourite guest or meditating, and who, instead of being able to join in, has to carry on preparing the meal to be shared afterwards? Mary is the contemplative part of our being, meditating, listening deeply to the Christ within, at prayer or meeting him in careful reading of Scripture, Lectio Divina.

This story in a way symbolises, who we are. Action and contemplation are two sides of our own being. We are both Martha and Mary. When we are so busy and grumble about there being no longer any time to meditate, then Martha has taken over. When we contemplate giving up our job to devote ourselves totally to the work of prayer/meditation and listening deeply, then we want to be only Mary. But we can't be one or the other exclusively, we are both, even when living in community: pray and work ? ora et labora?, the rule of a Benedictine Community and the rule of our life.

Martha is doing an important job, making everything ready for the meal to be shared, but by focusing resentfully on this, she loses sight of the right to exist of the other half of her soul, the deeply listening attentive Mary. Jesus points this out to her: ?Martha, Martha, you are fussing and fretting about so many things.? Don't we all do this at times? Especially on those occasions we need to remember our contemplative side and do our duties with attention rather than grudgingly. If only we could do, what we have to do, from the awareness of our deep centre within us, where compassion and friendship for others dwells. The one who grumbles is our ego, whose need is esteem, who wants to be praised and see others blamed. But instead of that, what is needed is acceptance and integration of both sides of our being: we have to be Martha sometimes but we can also be Mary at other times and that is alright too. In Jesus' own life we see this wonderful balance of action and contemplation. He wanders over the countryside preaching and healing and yet often we hear that he withdraws to a quiet place to be still and pray: "During this time he went out one day into the hills to pray and spent the night in prayer to God."

Most life in the Church today focuses on Martha and some have even forgotten the work that Mary is praised for by Jesus. There is doing, caring for others, talking and vocal prayer of praise, adoration, petition, intercession, thanksgiving and liturgical prayer – all important and valid ways of prayer. But Mary's work, silent prayer, deep listening – contemplation – is relegated to the few nuns and monks drawn to this way of being. This was John Main's calling in life, which Laurence Freeman carries forward: to try and re-connect ordinary Christians with the long-established tradition of contemplative prayer, which goes back to the teaching of Jesus. In 2007 the World Community of Christian Meditation received canonical recognition from the Vatican as a Ecumenical Contemplative Community, acknowledging the importance of the work of Mary.

Kim Nataraja

For further help with setting up and leading groups, please look at the "Christian Meditation Groups" Website in English, Spanish and French, based on the book "A Pearl of Great Price" by Laurence Freeman

School of Meditation Weekly Teachings

Source URL: <http://www.wccm.org/content/weekly-teachings-2272012>